

Unmarried Partners

The benefit regulations do not allow unmarried partners to claim Bereavement Support Payments but a Supreme Court decision in 2018 decided that Widowed Parent's Allowance should be paid to a woman with children who had been in a long-term relationship. Get specialist benefits advice if your partner has died but you were not married or in a civil partnership, as the law may change.

Future Relationships

Unlike earlier widows'/ widowers' benefits, Bereavement Support Payments are not affected if you remarry or start a new relationship while they are being paid to you, although other benefits may be.

If you were a Carer

If you have been getting Carer's Allowance and/or Income Support for someone who has died, you can carry on getting these for up to eight weeks, along with any carer premiums due to you.

You could claim Bereavement Support Payment if the person who died was your spouse or civil partner. If not, there are other benefits that might help.

Other Benefits

As soon as possible after someone has died, get benefits advice to make sure you get all the financial support you are entitled to. If you need to top up your income with a means-tested benefit, you will now usually need to claim Universal Credit.

If you have been getting Income Support as a carer, for the person who has died, your claim will end after eight weeks. If your partner has died and you had a joint claim for Tax Credits, you cannot change this to a single person's claim.

In both of the situations above, you will usually need to claim Universal Credit.

If you can't get means-tested benefits but have worked and paid NI contributions recently, you might be entitled to new-style ESA if you are not well enough to work, or new-style JSA if you are looking for work.

Guide to... Bereavement Support Payments

Changes of Circumstances No 5

Help when someone dies

Losing someone close to you is often not only an emotional shock, but a financial shock too. You may have lost someone whose wages supported your family.

Someone you provided care for might have died, meaning your carer's benefits will stop. This leaflet looks at the benefits that could help you through this difficult time.

We look at help with funeral payments in a separate leaflet.

Bereavement Support Payment

If your husband, wife or civil partner dies, you may be able to claim Bereavement Support Payment. This was introduced in April 2017.

If your husband, wife or civil partner died before April 2017, you might already get Bereavement Allowance or Widowed Parent's Allowance.

If your husband died before April 2001, you might already get a Widow's Pension or Widowed Mother's Allowance.

You do not need to change from the benefit you are already getting to the newer bereavement benefits.

To get Bereavement Support Payment, the person who has died must have been your wife, husband or civil partner, and you must have been legally married or in a civil partnership when they died.

Your right to a Bereavement Support Payment is based on your spouse or civil partner's National Insurance record. They must have paid Class 1 or Class 2 Contributions, in any one tax year, worth at least 25 times the lower earnings limit.

However, if they died in an industrial accident, or from a prescribed industrial disease, they need not have met the NI conditions for you to get Bereavement Support Payment.

You must usually both have been ordinarily resident in the UK when your spouse or civil partner died.

How much benefit do you get?

Bereavement Support payment is made up of a lump sum and, for 18 months, a monthly payment. These payments are tax free.

The lump sum is treated as capital if you claim other benefits, but is disregarded for 52 weeks.

The monthly payment is disregarded when working out means-tested benefits and is not counted as income for the Benefit Cap.

Bereavement Support Payment overlaps with benefits like Carer's Allowance and new-style ESA, so you will only be paid the one which gives you the highest amount.

There is a standard rate and a higher rate of both parts of the payment.

The lump sum is either £2,500 or £3,500.

The monthly payment is either £100 or £350.

You get the higher rates if:

- You were pregnant when you spouse or civil partner died or,
- You were entitled to Child Benefit when your spouse or civil partner died or,
- You have become entitled to Child Benefit for a child who was living with you or your spouse/civil partner immediately before the death.

Making a Claim

You can call the DWP Bereavement Service on 0800 731 0469 to make a claim, or download a claim form from .GOV.UK

To get the lump sum payment, you must make your claim within 12 months of your spouse or civil partner's death. The monthly payments are payable for up to 18 months from the date of you spouse or civil partner's death and can be backdated for up to 3 months.

If you claim more than three months after you were bereaved you may not get the full number of payments.
